

ABSTRACT

A method for mixing silicate mineral filled rubber wherein excess water is employed, either absorbed on the silicate mineral surface or added as an additional component in a mixing pass, yielding rubber compounds having lower alcohol content, lower Mooney viscosity, higher torque rise, less heat build-up, and better cure properties than achieved in rubber compounds made in a similar manner but without the added water.